7:Christopher Isherwood translated Gita into English. He was extremely influenced with the Gita. His admiration for Gita and for Krishna's arguments in particular has been a lasting phenomenon in parts of European culture. It was widely praised by Wilhelm von Humboldt as "the most beautiful, perhaps the only true philosophical song existing in any known tongue."

8:The main themes of the poem are nature, aging, and immortality. The poet appreciates nature and contrasts the changes time has brought in his body and soul. Thus, it turns towards the immortality of nature and wants to be a part of that.

9:The swans in the poem represent the visibility of youth and beauty. As "life and love attend upon them still." Their vitality is juxtaposed against the poet who is growing old and can only remember a time when he "trode with a lighter tread." While the poet's body is decaying, the swans remain constant in his life.

10: The mother asks Prakriti to be more practical and warns her that man's world is meant only to be heard, not to be practised. The filth into which an evil fate (i.e., caste) has filled is a wall of mud that no spade in the world can break through. She tells Prakriti that she is unclean and should not taint the outside world with her unclean presence. To stray anywhere beyond its limits is to trespass.

(11) According to the author, there was a time when people developed themselves through arguments. Even our women folk were also so strong that they could defeat men. Even today, the argumentative heritage of India is needed to keep onto the impacts of different influences that have shaped India and its traditions. No doubt, the argumentative spirit helped in the development of democracy, intellectual and social history of India.

The authors have presented positive notes praising the importance of arguments. The essay not only presents the life of riches of India but challenges the world countries who are dependent on the third world countries. It also reveals India is not the same as before. The argument, which seems to become extinct, and acceptance has taken its place in the modern time.

12. Importance of Education

Education is all about gathering knowledge and training the mind to think and apply reasoning to solve problems. It is the foundation on which any person, society, or country progresses. While our country has grown and developed over time, we may take the value of education for granted.

We need to know and understand the value of education. Teachers encourage students to reflect upon its significance by writing an essay. We need to think over it—why it is valuable for society and nation, why education is important for each and everyone.

Education is crucial in shaping our lives and empowering individuals to achieve their goals. Here is an example: education is important in our life because it helps us learn new things and understand the world around us. It gives us the skills we need to get a good job in the future. Education teaches us to think critically and solve problems. It helps everyone have equal chances to succeed. It does not matter where they come from.

Education is important because it helps us to grow and improve our society. Thus, we should value our education and ensure that children from every society get an equal opportunity at education.
